Stop Sticking to Stick: Decreasing IV Insertion Attempts by Identifying Difficult Peripheral Access Beforehand
Author: Elaine Hughes, BSN, RN, CAPA; Samantha McGuigan, BSN, RN; Claiborne Miller Davis, MS, BA
UVA Health University Medical Center

Background

- In a retrospective audit of an inpatient surgery center (ISC), it was determined that IV attempts had increased and the rate of peripheral access was decreasing.
- Researchers for difficult IV sites looked for the guidelines for the number of attempts per patient and changes of placement of catheters on the site.
- Difficult IVs were not the preferred IV sites for central access.
- An audit of 216 IVs revealed that 13% had either a greater than recommended gauge, measurement that 2 attempts to place, increased location, or missing documentation.

Model Used

The Brooklinn Model for Patient-Centered Care: Excellence in Health Care (UVA Medical Center, 2013)

PICO Question: In adult patients of an inpatient surgery center, is the Modified & DVA tool valid and used for identifying venous access prior to inserting a peripheral IV?

Practice Change: Modified & DVA Tool

- Select using a 21 gauge catheter using the Modified & DVA tool.
- 21 gauge IVs are the recommended IV gauge for all patients.
- Change notes of attempts & site.
- Monitor rate of success at 24 hours.

Conclusion & Next Steps

The Modified & DVA tool was used for identifying venous access prior to inserting a peripheral IV. The tool was used for 216 IVs. The tool was used for 216 IVs. The tool was used for 216 IVs.

Plastic Bag Reduction Initiative

Alicia White, BSN, RN, CAPA; Tabatha Gilbert, BSN, RN, CPAN

DEFINITION OF THE PROBLEM

In the progressive care unit at the Outpatient Surgery Center (OSC), nurses give each patient one to two plastic bags for their belongings each day. OSC used 3.97 plastic bags per patient per day for their belongings. Additionally, evidence indicates that plastic bags have a negative impact on the environment and can contribute to air pollution. Researchers have identified that plastic bags can be recycled, and once recycled, they can be used to create new products. However, the current recycling process is inefficient, and many plastic bags end up in landfills, contributing to environmental degradation.

SITUATIONAL OVERVIEW

Plastic bag usage is being reduced by 50% by the end of 2025. The current usage is 3.97 plastic bags per patient per day, which is expected to decrease to 2.00 plastic bags per patient per day by the end of 2025. This reduction is expected to result in a 50% decrease in plastic bag usage, leading to significant cost savings and environmental benefits.
